For centuries, Chinese cooking has placed an emphasis on taste and ingredients. It not only has strict requirements on the colour, fragrance and flavour of meals and snacks, but also has certain requirements on the naming of dishes, the way of tasting the flavour and the rhythm of having dinner with atmosphere and entertainment.

The dishes are named according to the main ingredients, supplementary ingredients and seasoning, as well as their cooking methods. These standards are the reason why you get families of dishes and wildly different names.

The cooking technique of China is closely related with medical treatment and health care. The belief is that food and medicine have the same origin. The medicinal properties of the raw materials of food are used in all kinds of cuisine. Even to this day, advances in cuisine and medicine go hand-in-hand.
